Neverhome by Laird Hunt

"Historians estimate that some 400 women disguised themselves to fight in America's bloody war of the 1860s. From this spark, Hunt has coaxed a brilliant and breathtaking blaze of a novel, lit the ferocious will and all too human spirit of its unforgettable narrator." (—The Guardian)

Ancillary Justice by Ann Leckie

"This is a splendid, weird, moving novel...It manages beautifully that trick of embracing the surreal in order to underscore and emphasize the real—not as allegory, but as affirmation of emotional truths that don't conform to the neat and tidy boxes in which we're encouraged to house them." (NPR.org)
